

COVID-19 misinformation spread and effect on older adults

Have you recently used online resources to get information related to COVID-19?

Have you encountered any online COVID-19 misinformation lately?

WE WANT TO HEAR FROM YOU!

Researchers in the McGill School of Information Studies are looking for adults aged 60 years or older who reside in Canada to participate in a study aimed at understanding the spread of COVID-19 misinformation and its effect on older adults.

We want to hear about how you have been using online resources (such as online search, social media, websites, etc.), to get COVID-19 information during this pandemic. Your input is vital to improving the design of online resources!

Participation would involve completing a 25-30 min phone interview to learn about you and your experiences using online resources to get COVID-19 related information.

For more information or to participate, please contact Amira Ghenai, PhD at amira.ghenai@mail.mcgill.ca or 519-722-1055

The principal investigator, Prof. Karyn Moffatt, can be reached at karyn.moffatt@mcgill.ca or 514-398-1878.
